

And the winner for "Project of the Year" is...

The Greater Toronto Home Builders' Association recognized Diamante Developments project, The Royalton (shown at left), as "Project of the Year" under the multi-family category last month.

The design team at Diamante took more than six months to work and re-work The Royalton's design to perfection. The result, according to lead architect, Attila Burka, has the "precision of a Swiss watch".

The building's exterior is a tribute to modern classicism, combining function with artistic flourish. The unparalleled design details includes stylized Roman pillars, multiple windows forms and delicately carved border treatments. The grand lobby sets the tone with its imposing mahogany paneling, steel-accented columns, lustrous marble flooring and handsome custom-made carpets.
